

- How can a Newly Industrialised Country be defined?

NICs are countries that are no longer developing countries but not fully developed yet.

- What are the main indicators that a country has become a NIC?

Their economy has moved from agriculture to manufacturing and service sectors. They have a better standard of living and a low level of corruption. Besides, the population and urbanisation of the country are growing rapidly.

- What are the relationships between NICs and developed countries?

Developed countries like to invest in these countries and create trading links. They also appreciate the low labour cost. On the other hand NICs benefit from these relations since it strengthens their economy.

NICs: cf texte

- The Four Asian Tigers: South Korea, Taiwan, Singapore and Hong Kong.